negative values mean that the difference and the gap are favourable to females

The tables and graph above show that in the lower quartile, females continue to be the majority of the workforce at 59.6% and are paid 15p more than male employees. In the lower middle and upper middle quartiles there continues to be an almost 50-50 split in male and females but males are now the majority of the lower middle quartile (57.8%) and females the majority of the upper middle quartile. Despite making up 60.1% of this quartile, females are paid 1.3% less. The gap widens the most in favour to males in the upper quartile, where the mean gender pay gap increases to 12.43% with males paid £2.17 more than females and the female average hourly rate is 22p less than last year. With the overall GMS gender split of 49.4% male and 50.6% female there continues to be a disproportionate number of males in the highest paid jobs and their mean hourly rate has increased more than the female hourly rate, increasing the mean gender pay gap from last year.
